FULL TEXT

Companies receive hundreds of offers from people who aspire to get a position. In that first instance, to capture the attention of the recruiter, it is essential to stand out from other applicants with a resume (CV) organized, neat and properly structured data. In order not to fail in the attempt, here are four free sites to create a professional CV in a few minutes

This document with personal and work background stands out from any other because it has a particular organization and order. The idea is that the recruiter, in a few seconds, identifies the data he/she is looking for in a candidate.

Most online sites provide limited tools to create a CV without spending a penny or spending a lot of time. If you are looking for a fully customized template, you will need to purchase a monthly subscription

Once completed, most allow you to upload it to LinkedIn, which is the world's largest professional network with more than 750 million users in more than 200 countries and territories.

Create your CVIt

was just launched this week and was designed so that all job seekers can build their own professional CV in a simple way, with colorful templates and without traps

Unlike the other options, Crea tu CV does not have a paid version and you can download it without leaving your personal data

. You can customize the typography, upload a photo, add the options that you think are relevant or remove those that are not necessary.

This initiative was born from a regional problem: more than 25% of young people are unemployed and taking the first step in the world of work is difficult. The site has the support of the Government of the City of Buenos Aires, PwC, IAE, UCEMA, Estudia Trabajando, UADE, among others.

ResumeMakerIt is simple and you can design a resume without the need to register and fill out forms. The free version has a small watermark. The only thing that is asked in return is to share a link to the website on social networks to make it known.

Currently the platform is used by 800,000 people and most of them are from India, although its founder is Argentinian. His name is Fernando Pessagno and he decided to start his own resume website to help thousands to get a job.

You can opt for different fonts, various font sizes, six colors or choose a custom one. You can also activate or deactivate sections to add more information and choose between three sizes of paper to print: A4, letter and legal. It also has a paid version -without watermark and with better image definition- to generate economic income.

CVMaker

The design of the CVs obtained with this page is classic, without stridency or shocking designs, although simple and functional

You don't need to register to create your CV unless you want to host it on the site to modify it later

. It offers the possibility to choose between different styles, all very simple but worthy.

Once completed it can be exported in PDF, HTML and TXT format. Also, share through a link with anyone interested. At any time, you can access a preview to see the results.

The big drawback is that it has only 6 free templates and the styles it offers are scarce. For something more complex, it invites a subscription.

CanvaAmong

Canva's many design options -poster, logo, presentation, card, flyer, infographic- it is the best option for those who are looking for something more elaborate, since it provides 250 thousand templates free of charge

Another of its advantages is that it allows you to process and transform your CV from your computer, tablet or cell phone. To save the information, it has 5GB of free storage

If the idea is to decorate it to the extreme, there are several free elements that can be added such as photos, logos, small icons, to give it a visual air. It has a paid mode with many more options.
